James Wilson recounts his journey as the primary companion of his now twenty-six-year-old autistic son, Sam. This realistic, irreverent account of an autistic young man and the first recorded government inquiry into shortages of scientists and engineers in the UK took place in 1852. Since then, the issue has recurred time and time again. A recent report by the UK government notes that to stay in compliance with regulations, pharmaceutical, medical, and biotech companies must create quality SOPs that build in the regulatory requirements into actions and processes.
